

Database Design

To achieve third normal form in the database design for a university's course registration system, partial dependencies and transitive dependencies were removed. Many tables contained partial dependencies where data about a course could be determined by only the Page ID. Those attributes were removed and then added to the Home page table, which is now in third normal form. Similarly, there were transitive dependencies where non-key attributes depended on other non-key attributes.

